DCI'S INTRODUCTION OF CARL T. ROWAN BLACK HISTORY MONTH GUEST SPEAKER 7 February 1985

Honored guest and colleagues at the Central Intelligence Agency. First of all, I want to take opportunity to affirm the Agency's strong interest in and support for this week's official recognition of our nation's black heritage.

This occasion enables us, as a member of the family of federal agencies as well as a member of the community in which we live, to unite in recognizing the contributions of a significant and important part of our population. It also provides an opportunity for us to reflect on the roots of our heritage and to remind ourselves and our colleagues of the achievements, the broad interests, and the concerns of the spectrum of American citizens employed by the Central Intelligence Agency.

In line with recognizing the contributions of black Americans there is no finer example of the best that our nation has to offer than our guest of honor--distinguished public servant, journalist, radio commentator, and television panelist Carl T. Rowan.

Carl Rowan has served with great distinction for some five years as a high official of this government. He has been honored in every field of journalism. His television special on "The Race War in Rhodesia" earned him a George Foster Peabody Award, the most prestigious in American broadcasting. He has an Emmy for the "greatest contribution to broadcasting" in the nation's capital and three other Emmys for television specials on the curse of drug abuse in America and the woes of the housing industry. The Overseas Press Club honored him for his Reader's Digest article on Thailand.

Carl Rowan, a 58-year-old veteran of 36 years in journalism, was voted "Journalist of the Year" by Washington's Capital Press Club in 1978, the same year the Ebony magazine bestowed upon him its first annual "American Black Achievement Award" for the "most outstanding contributor in the field of communications."

Mr. Rowan, a graduate of Oberlin College, is the recipient of 36 honorary degrees from many of the nation's finest institutions of higher education. He has been consistently cited as one of American journalism's loudest, strongest and most effective voices in behalf of not only the poor and disadvantaged of this country, but the world. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., in his book Stride Toward Freedom, credits Mr. Rowan with saving the Montgomery, Alabama, bus boycott.

For almost 19 years, after leaving a four and one-half year period as a top United States Government official, Mr. Rowan has been writing a widely syndicated newspaper column for the Chicago Sun-Times and, now, for the News America syndicate. Millions of Americans listen five days a week to "The Rowan Report," his series of commentaries on national and international affairs sponsored by the Chrysler Corporation and K-Mart.

Mr. Rowan has for 18 years been a roving editor of the Reader's Digest, the world's most widely circulated magazine, for which he writes several articles a year. He is one of the most sought after lecturers in the United States, primarily because of his breadth of experience as a student and civic leader, top-level government official and prize-winning correspondent on domestic and foreign issues.

Mr. Rowan was born on August 11, 1925. He grew up in McMinnville, Tennessee, where his father stacked lumber for 25 cents an hour--when work was available. His mother did household work. From an early age, Carl has always shown himself to be one hell of a man. He hoed bulb grass at 10 cents an hour, advancing to lawn mowing at 25 cents an hour.

He graduated as valedictorian of his high school class. While a freshman at Tennessee State College in Nashville, Tennessee, he passed a nationally competitive examination, got into the Navy's V-12 program, and went on to midshipman's school to become one of the first 15 blacks in United States history to attain commissioned officer rank in the Navy.

After serving on two ships in the North Atlantic, Mr. Rowan returned to Oberlin College in Ohio as a GI-Bill student and earned a Bachelor's Degree in mathematics. He then went to the School of Journalism at the University of Minnesota where he earned a Master's Degree. In 1948 Mr. Rowan joined the staff of the Minneapolis Tribune where his writings on the flight of blacks in the south, his articles on India, Africa and Southeast Asia earned him numerous awards, including designation by the U. S. Junior Chamber of Commerce as one of America's outstanding young men in 1953. Mr. Rowan's first major series of articles for the Tribune led to the first of his five books, South of Freedom, which was cited by the American Library Association as one of the best books of the year. He left the Minneapolis Tribune in February 1961 when President John F. Kennedy asked him to join his administration as Deputy Assistant Secretary of State for Public Affairs, at that time the highest office ever held by a black person in the State Department. A year later, Mr. Rowan was appointed to serve simultaneously on the United States delegation to the United Nations.

In 1963, President Kennedy named Mr. Rowan as Ambassador to Finland. In 1964, when Edward R. Murrow became deathly ill, President Lyndon B. Johnson recalled Rowan from Finland to replace Mr. Murrow as Director of the U. S. Information Agency. In this post, Mr. Rowan became the first black American ever to sit with the President's Cabinet and on the U. S. National Security Council.

Yet most Americans today know Carl Rowan as a panelist whom they have seen for almost 16 years on "Agronsky and Company," the popular political talk show that he helped to originate. They know him as a tough questioner on "Meet the Press." Despite all this, his highest and most satisfying achievements may have been as Vivien Rowan's husband of 34 years and as the father of three professionally successful children.

It gives me special pleasure, and does the Central Intelligence Agency honor, to present to all of you a great American, Mr. Carl T. Rowan.
